What you can do right now: Call Ana Mari Cauce at (206) 543-5010 and tell her that UW needs to keep up with industry standards and give workers a free UPASS!

Bargaining for an Affordable and Accessible UW

Unions on campus have come together to bargain with UW over transit passes. Instead of negotiating, UW is telling us their usual tired story: "We'd sure love to be a better employer, we just can't find the money!" But with a 7 billion dollar budget and enormous political clout, we know that UW can do better. Let's make sure that they do!

Amazon Does It. So can UW.

Large employers in Seattle already provide their workers with transit passes, including Amazon, Microsoft, Starbucks, Children's Hospital, City of Seattle, King County, and many more. UW is the third largest employer in the state, and we need to make sure that they do their fair share to reduce congestion, reduce emissions, and take care of workers.

Make UW Prioritize Transit.

Workers are being pushed farther and farther from UW by the rising cost of living. For many workers, a free transit pass would reduce commute times and alleviate already high transportation costs. It would also reduce emissions and improve the clogged traffic conditions in the U District.

We need you!

UW will only listen if workers on campus are united. Let's come together and demand a better university!
